Existing books and articles tend to emphasize theory and statistical analyses and not the time when problems are confronted in the field and a practitioner has to solve them. This book aims to fill a gap in the assistance literature. The audience is scholars, students, career professionals and others interested in the practice of education assistance. It simulates the experiences of a consultant-expert by reviewing education issues in developing countries and giving brief vignettes of the way these issues have been addressed in various countries. Finally, it describes three in-depth cases that show the studies, planning, and implementation that go into actual projects. These cases—in Egypt, Pakistan, and Afghanistan—are here written up for the first time, in a clear, easy-to-read style appropriate for students and development professionals in training.

Praise

"This book does exactly what it promises to do: bring to life the practice of development. Scrupulously neutral, in writing devoid of ideological a priori assertions and theoretical hang-ups, Andrea Rugh carefully analyzes three major aid programs in which she herself was involved in the last three decades and lets the facts speak for themselves. In so doing, she manages to convey both development aid's promises and its shortcomings, its creativity and blinders, its failures and successes."
